Important Information for Air Force club members

The Air Force Club Card Program is moving to a new systems platform effective Oct. 28. However, because of two years worth of planning and preparation, members won't notice any changes in service.

Bank One, the issuer of the Air Force Club Card is moving member accounts to a new state-of-the-art system that holds Air Force Club member account information.

The switchover will involve nearly a week of "blackout" to the club works system, which services the Air Force Club Membership Card Program. During Oct. 27 - Nov. 1, there will be an impact on several processes affecting club members. The most significant will be the inability of club members to make payments on their accounts at their base clubs, over the Internet or by phone.

Members will be able to view their accounts and balances on the Bank One website, but the "Make a Payment" option will not be available.

Cardholders whose accounts are due during the blackout period are encouraged to make an early payment this month. Mailing payments during this period would be a good option.

"They need to pay ahead of time and not wait until the blackout period to pay," said Fred Fried, club operations branch chief, Headquarters Air Force Services Agency, San Antonio.

Cardholders will still be able to make charges to their accounts during this period.

For more information, contact the Mountain View Club, 846-5165.
